During the ten years from 1887 to 1897 Sargent and others offered the opportunity for the prompt publication of information about trees and shrubs collected at the Arnold arboretum. Since the publication of that journal was discontinued the arboretum has had no organ. Since 1911 information in regard to the flowering and fruiting of some of the interesting plants in the arboretum and their cultivation has appeared in Illustrations of popular information. The Journal of the Arnold arboretum will not take the place of these bulletins, which will be continued.—v. 1, no. 1, introductory note.

Instruction in theology has been given at Harvard college from the time of its foundation, but the differentiation of the Divinity school from the college was gradual; the first mention of the Theological seminary of Harvard college appeared in 1810; the Divinity faculty was formally organized in 1819 as an independent school of theology; it has always had the liberal support of Unitarians.
